6. As part of the conference opening, keynote speaker Dr Heather Richardson from St Christopher's Hospice in the United Kingdom mooted a new starting point for ACP where community members and groups become active participants. She also called for partnership between the public and professionals related to behaviour change.

7. Professor Amy Chow from the University of Hong Kong is the keynote speaker for the second day of the conference. She will discuss the development of a new tiered and multi-stage model of ACP that involves health-related behaviours and classification of disease prevention in public health.

8. "I am honoured that AIC has been chosen to host the 8th International Conference on Advance Care Planning here in Singapore. It is a testament to our nation's progress in the domain over years, and the strides we made for person-centred care, given Singapore's multi-culturalism where perspectives on health and advance care vary greatly. I am confident that with the collective effort of ACP professionals and the community, we can foster a stronger culture of open dialogue, empathy, and respect that empowers individuals to navigate their healthcare journey with dignity and autonomy," said Mr Tan Kwang Cheak, Chief Executive Officer of AIC.

Growth of ACP in Singapore

9. ACP is not just a crucial aspect of healthcare in Singapore, but an essential practice that ensures each person's values, beliefs, and wishes about their healthcare choices are honoured. Through the process of planning for future health and personal care options, the person's attending doctor and loved ones can understand the preferred treatment decisions when the person is unable to express his or her wishes.

10. Singapore's ACP journey began in 2011 when AIC was appointed the ACP National Office, with a primary goal to introduce and enable the local implementation of ACP in acute hospitals.

11. Since then, AIC has expanded its partnership to institutions from various care settings to introduce, implement and scale ACP across the healthcare continuum, with the longer-term plan to integrate ACP as part of every patient's routine care. This is done through establishing the national ACP framework, training healthcare and care professionals, expanding ACP recognition into the community, as well as advocating for IT enablement among many other initiatives.

12. In recent years, AIC has also expanded and upskilled our Community Care providers to normalise early discussions about healthcare preferences and bring ACP facilitation closer to the homes of seniors, caregivers and residents within the community.

13. To date, over 33,000 Singaporeans have completed their ACPs. This number is expected to rise alongside increasing levels of engagement events, health literacy, and general awareness of the benefits of completing an ACP.

About the ACP-i Conference

14. The ACP-i Conference, spearheaded by the ACP-i Society, is held once every two years to bring together an international fraternity of ACP experts to share best practices on ACP. This conference also creates a platform for leaders and practitioners to network with potential partners.

15. "Advance Care Planning International (ACP-i) is delighted to partner AIC in hosting the 8th ACP-i Conference in Singapore, which also marks our first ACP conference in Asia," said Professor Tanja Krones, ACP-i President. "This event is an excellent platform for all participating practitioners and experts to learn from each other, establish new partnerships, and more importantly, strengthen their local and international networks. It is our hope that everyone will leave the conference with more knowledge, ideas, collaborations, and even new friends."
